

The FCC should reject the Broadband Power Line (BPL) proposal. The interference caused to present users of the HF spectrum would be so bad as to render the spectrum useless to those that are now using the HF frequencies, military, amateur radio, international broadcasts and many more.

Japan another industrialized country has already rejected this form of power line carrier technology. They must agree the interference BPL would cause is too great.